'Photos from the Dead City' was intended to be part of a larger book entitled 'Tales From The Dead City' documenting my years growing up a metal head in 1980's & 90s, Peterborough, Ontario. This little photo-zine is presented here as a separate companion piece to those writings with many more pictures added than originally planned.

Starting sometime in 2007, I began documenting Alternative, Metal and Punk music through the medium of photography. Always being the guy at the bar with the camera allowed me contribute to the local Peterborough and surrounding scene as an elder amongst a typically much younger crowd. Thankfully many great friendships were formed along with way. Hopefully I didn't come across as too "...creepy..." or "...undercover..." to those I never got a chance to connect with.

The majority of the pictures included within, were taken with a very old Nikon D40 with a 18-55 mm kit lens. With an average of 10 to 12 megapixel resolution and a speed flash for dark room shots. Although one of my favorite purchases EVER!... Even with the added speed flash, The Nikon D40 rarely took a good color photo inside a darkened club. The reds were always way too over saturated. I usually knocked the photos to black and white and brightened the images for sharing. Many of the photographs are seen here for the first time in full color.

Some nights, when asked if I was a professional photographer, much like William S. Burroughs my reply was usually "...I own a camera...". I've always enjoyed that non-pretentious outlook to art.

If the artists were kind enough to allow me to photograph, I would share them with anyone involved in the scene that was interested or cared enough to check them out.

Most evenings I couldn't have cared less about F stops and Aperture settings. My only goal was to capture the story as quickly as possible.

The trick I found to getting good photo was to take lots and lots of them. Into the hundreds... I also found that certain people no matter how many pictures I took of them always looked like a boring statue with a guitar, while others with only a couple of pictures looked amazing. Perhaps I was capturing their charisma. Some have it..., And others don't. Maybe, it's that simple.

My late nights at the clubs have gotten less and less frequent over the years, thankfully this piece can serve as a reminder to a those moments in space and time.

Cheers... - Tony
